This isn't what I imagined my life would be.

I care about Chelsea, I do, she's been my best (and only) friend since we were teenagers. I love her, but I don't feel that passionate love that people always talk about. Who knows? Maybe that kind of romanticized love only exists in books and movies. That's what I have always told myself, at least. But after I meet Aidan, I know that's not true. For the first time, I've met someone who makes me feel passionate love.

And I can't deny my feelings any longer, even if it turns my entire life upside down.

I've got my bakery, I've got my friends, life is good. But I suppose it would be nice to have a romantic interest in my life. In this conservative town, I've dated just about every gay man I can find. And while some have been nice enough, nobody has really clicked for me. I know I should probably move out of this town to open up my options, but I've got my bakery here and I can't imagine giving up my business. It's in my bakery that I meet Miles.

He and his fiancée, Chelsea, are looking to design their wedding cake. Only he doesn't seem that interested in the cake...

or her, for that matter. But I do keep catching him staring at me...
