Cohen's lived the first eighteen years of his life in the omega dorms, trained for a life of submission with whoever decides to make him theirs. But he's always dreamed of a better life, one where an omega is more than just an object for his alpha. When the car transporting him to his new master crashes, he takes the chance, escaping into free, if lonely, life among humans. Once in a while, he dreams of having a mate, an alpha who can protect him so that he's not looking over his shoulder everyday. But those don't exist, do they? Dom has only one goal: Get revenge on the hunters that wiped out his whole pack. Everything else must fall to the side until he finds them. After all, he's the reason why he'll never have a family, a home, a pack to call his own. When the hunters threaten a lonely omega in the heart of the city, Dom steps in. What he isn't prepared for though, is the overwhelming attraction he feels for the omega, the ancient drive to bond with a mate. In Cohen, Dom finds a future that he thought he would never have...one he'll do anything to protect.
