Without applying our philosophy, how could we evaluate just and workable laws for society to live by? How would we discuss our morality and ethics and apply them for the benefit of humankind? How would we decide how to behave, so we may do the least harm to each other – and to other living species? Join philosopher Janet Cameron as she examines various aspects of ethical philosophy; animal rights, immortality, the pursuit of happiness, gender-based abortion, semantics in politics, utilitarianism applied to law and racial slurs.
