As a young girl, Gia was enthralled with her grammie's life. To her young mind, Grammie's stories felt like adventures to be embarked. Gia always admired her grammie and wondered about her love life. Gia never met her grandfather for he died before she was born. When her grammie had passed away, Gia wanted to see for herself her grandmother's world. Gia longed to visit the Philippines, Francisco's homeland. It was there that Bernadette, Gia's grandmother, met a young civil engineer and struck up a friendship. The friendship intrigued Gia and so she found a position through her school's job board that would help sustain her financially as she traveled the islands. With her parents consent, Gia packed her bags, and explore for herself her grandmother's world. Little did she know that she was destined to meet Armando, a 4th generation coffee producing farmer from Lipa, Batangas and his cousin, Enrique. Gia found welcome with Armando's family, embraced her life at the hacienda, and uncovered a secret. It is a coming-of-age story of a young girl, who leaves everything that she's familiar with to retrace her grandmother's stories and world. Unwittingly charting her own destiny in a land where she was a foreigner, to meet a man who reveals her strength and courage as they both learn to love again.
