When Cole White is diagnosed with dissociative disorder, he thought the illness would be the worst of his troubles.

But when he finds the journal of a former patient in his room at Woodsland Asylum, he realizes that things could get much worse. The journal belonged to a man named Derek Lach. Derek's journal describes how the asylum becomes after a change in leadership. The new leader puts the asylum on lockdown. No one is allowed out. Not the patients. Not even the staff. The new leader begins using the patients as lab rats, experimenting on them while neglecting to care for them properly. The journal depicts a nightmare, but suddenly Cole begins to have dreams that are in Derek's point of view. Shortly after, events that Derek described in the journal begin to happen in Cole's life. He too experiences a change in leadership at Woodsland Asylum that brings tyranny and oppression.
